Course Description

This course provides an overview of the role of the moving image in Swedish culture and society during the last one hundred years, a period when moving image culture became increasingly important. Swedish film and television culture is presented in relation to international trends and developments. Various approaches are considered, including the analysis of formal concerns combined with different socio-cultural perspectives as well as entertainment genres and avant-garde experiments. Industrial practice and film analysis are discussed with a focus on individual artists. Attention is also paid to case studies dealing with questions of criticism and reception.

After passing the course the student will have acquired:

- Knowledge of the different media in moving image culture in the Swedish context.
- Familiarity with the main methods of critically analyzing film and TV output.
- Familiarity with the main trends in Swedish film and television studies.

Assessment and marking

The course is assessed through one final exam at the end of the course and through two small-scale additional assignments in the form of one written reading report and one brief oral presentation in class. The additional assignments are compulsory but not formally assessed and will not be taken into account in the final marking. All written assignments will be submitted through the interactive platform Mondo and may be written in English or Swedish. The grading follows a seven-grade scale: A (excellent), B (very good), C (good), D (satisfactory), E (sufficient), Fx (insufficient), F (entirely insufficient).

Course Requirements

All film, television, and other media material screened within the course framework are considered mandatory, and thereby equated with the reading material. Written assignments should be presented in electronic format. All texts may be run through the software Urkund. Suspected cheating, such as plagiarism, will be dealt with by the University's Disciplinary Board.
